

Innovating in the hybrid cars market with competitive intelligence

Starting in 2019, every all-new model that Volvo introduces will be either a fully electric vehicle or a hybrid. That's an ambitious commitment. With many manufacturers seeking to be the most innovative brand in the industry, Volvo need to stand out in the highly competitive hybrid car space.

With such high ambitions, Volvo needed to truly understand what was happening in the competitive landscape. They partnered with Adthena for competitive intelligence to support their digital strategy to support their hybrid car sales.

To execute on their brand promise, Volvo were working in collaboration with global media agency Mindshare.

Key Results

As a result of newly introduced hybrid keywords, Volvo experienced strong positive results:

Increase in clicks

Significant boost in showroom visits

Improvement in new car configurations

CPA reduced by 50% on Paid Search

The Challenge

Volvo needed to understand the hybrid cars market, and to identify new opportunities to reach customers online. They wanted to understand how people were researching hybrid vehicles, and how they were converting on key hybrid search terms.

In collaboration with their agency, Mindshare, Volvo looked to Adthena's Whole Market View to investigate new search term opportunities, and to better understand the consumer journeys people were making as they research and purchase hybrid cars online.

The Results

With Adthena's technology, Mindshare and Volvo identified 72 new search term opportunities that captured consumer intent as they researched hybrid vehicles. Mindshare devised a test that measured potential clicks vs cost vs competition in order to better understand the full market opportunity, both in terms of volume and value.

The test helped Mindshare develop a clear understanding of the level of intent in their potential audience.
